If all the old books in the world could be opened at once and the articles found between their pages dismuseum. These inclosures would be made up of faded flowers, memoranda, bits of lace and occasionally a letter. And among those letters there would be found some that would wreck the peace of families. A librarian once told me that every book returned to the library was shaken and almost al-

"How much?" he asked the shop-

"Oh, you can have that for 10 cents." The purchaser tossed a bill on the counter and, forgetting his change, burried away. The shopman called after him, but he did not hear.

I didn't recognize the purchaser till he saw me in the shop and what was written under me. Then I knew him, despite a full beard he wore. He took the book and me to his room in bachelor quarters, and there I remained a week. Then one day he wrapped us carefully in paper and took us to another city on a train. We there entered a house, and in a few moments a indy entered. The man looked at her and "I have come at last."

The lady looked at him and uttered a little cry. He banded the book to her, open at the page to which I was pinned, and my dear mistress and I looked each other in the face again. I now live with the two, who are married, and am considered the most precious thing in the house.
